

Arts Group Fund Gets Stock Gift

Arts Council trustees heard various glad tidings at their monthly meeting yesterday at the YWCA.

Chief of these was the announcement by Charles Mark, council executive secretary, that the organization's endowment fund had been swelled over the Christmas holidays by an anonymous gift of stock valued at more than $1,000.

Mrs. O. K. LaRoque Jr., representing the Arts and Crafts Assn., announced that registration for association classes already had topped last year's total enrollment, with two sessions yet to go on this year's total.

And Philip Hanes, commenting on the meeting here last week of the directors of the American Symphony Orchestra League, noted especially their high praise for the Winston-Salem Symphony and its conductor John Lurie.

'Tremendous Progress'
They spoke of Lurie's "tremendous progress" since he first began conducting, and referred to him as a "top-notch symphony conductor," Hanes said.

Charles Vance, Symphony president, added later that the visitors had been greatly impressed with the Arts Council and the Community Center, which they toured.

Trustees also were told by Mrs. Jack Canady that a committee from the Art and American Home Department of the Junior Women's Club would meet with Arts Council representatives to discuss the possibility of the department dropping its activities and incorporating them in the Arts and Crafts Assn. program. If the department does so, Mrs. Canady said, some hundred persons would be added to the association's list of participants.

Selling Power
In two actions the trustees empowered specified officials of the council to sell any stocks given the council, and approved a plan of having free tickets to member groups' performances distributed to newcomers to the city through various welcoming agencies. The welcoming groups already are distributing council literature and a letter explaining the council's functions and offerings of member groups.

A number of coming activities of Associated Artists were listed by Mrs. Gladys Henry. The group, which will sponsor showings in the Community Center gallery, will have paintings of Old Salem by Mrs. James Gray on view during February, and an exhibition of work by various local artists during March.

During April and May the organization will sponsor a contest for North Carolina high school students. Also during the spring the group will hold its annual outdoor show in connection with the Old Salem Flower Fair and House and Garden Tour.

W. H. Cooper said Musical Theater members were available for joint presentations with other organizations.

Don Davis, Little Theater president, announced that his group had accepted responsibility for operating the Community Center theater and was willing to begin training persons to work its equipment.

Two new trustees, Mrs. W. F. Cox, representing the Art and American Home Department of the Senior Women's Club, and Mrs. Ray Ferris of the Sweet Adelines, and one alternate, Mrs. F. P. Kimmel, also of the Sweet Adelines, were introduced.

Student Leader Questions Taste Of UNC Organ
CHAPEL HILL (AP)—A student leader has challenged the moral taste of a new literary publication at the University of North Carolina. Two faculty members, however, quickly came to the magazine's defense.

Chairman John Brooks of the University's Student Party assailed the publication. The Spectator, saying, "poor taste is evident."

He said yesterday the new periodical, which is published by a group of students and is not an official organ of the University, also lacked in quality. He was apprehensive that it might attract writers who otherwise could contribute to The Quarterly, another literary publication with University sanction.

Dr. Bernard Fleischmann of the English department said, however, The Spectator's articles were following a common modern literary trend.

Chairman Kenneth Ness of the department of art added that the publication, which he said would stimulate student interest, should continue without faculty participation lest it become "cut and dried."

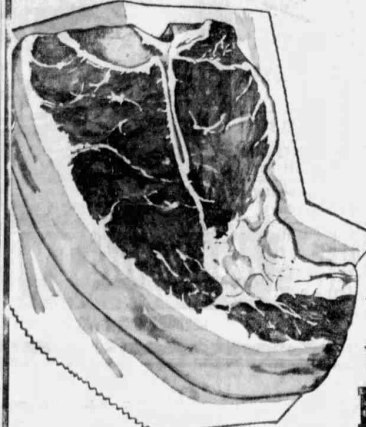

Fleischmann said none of the material was pornographic, although it contained several words not commonly accepted in everyday conversation.

The new outfit, which plans three editions yearly, published 750 copies of its first number dated Jan. 18.
